The AFSC in China: A Brief Summary

The Society of Friends became involved in China as early as 1845. British Friends spoke out against the Opium Wars with China and opened a mission and boys' school in Western China. The earliest records the American Friends Service Committee (AFSC) has on China date from 1924. Between the 1920s and mid-1930s, American Friends involved themselves in a variety of projects in China. When war broke out, the AFSC grew increasingly concerned with the humanitarian situation (as demonstrated by their numerous letters back and forth between Friends in America and China). Between 1941-1946, the Friends Service Committee ran the Friends' Ambulance Unit in China with American support. Throughout unoccupied China, including Yennan, the FAU worked to transport medical supplies to local hospitals and medical clinics. Between 1947-1949, the AFSC administered the Friends' Service Unit (the peace-time continuation of the FAU) which provided "medical and reconstruction assistance" in China. "Medical Team 19" continued to work in Yennan.

In 1949, facing increasing hostility from the new Communist government, the AFSC decided to leave mainland China. FSU operations finally concluded in 1951. The AFSC subsequently moved its work to Hong Kong, although it continued to monitor the humanitarian situation in China. Between 1959-1968, the AFSC ran a refugee assistance project in Hong Kong. In 1964, the AFSC also began to support a family planning project.

Throughout the 1960s, the AFSC worked to promote peaceful discussion of US-China relations. During this time, the organization organized a series of meetings and forums that eventually led to the formation of the National Committee on U.S.-China Relations. In 1971, four AFSC members visited China and organized an official AFSC trip for the next year. In 1971, an official AFSC delegation visited China. In 1978, the former members of "Medical Team 19" returned to China to visit and organized a visit for Chinese doctors to the U.S. In 1981, the AFSC donated $10 mil worth of pacemakers to Chinese hospitals. The following year, AFSC visited China to see the impact of their donation and give a further $1.5 mil worth of heart valves to Chinese hospitals.

In 1986, the AFSC opened a regional office from which they coordinate all of their activities in Indochina. In the late 1980s and early 1990s, the AFSC monitored the Chinese Communist government's economic reforms as well as their suppression of political dissidents and students.

How to Use this Survey:

The following survey was designed to give a brief overview of the AFSC's collection of materials on China. It is organized chronologically. Within in each year is a list of relevant boxes and their pertinent contents. As the AFSC's archives on China span a considerable period, there is much variance in organization systems. I have attempted to create some sort of consistency in my survey: for records between 1924-1940 I have listed the title of the box in which the material is contained and written a brief summary of the contents; for records between 1941-1991 (with the exception of 1953-54 where there was very limited AFSC activity in China), I have listed the individual folders within each box.

Some folders' titles are fairly self-explanatory; some are more opaque. For those folders that contained, in my opinion, interesting documents that were not indicated in the folder title, I included a brief note in italics. I have also estimated the amount of material, in sheets, for the vast majority of folders (although, I do not guarantee with any degree of certainty that these estimates are very accurate).

After the chronological section of the survey, I have included a separate section listing the photographs that the AFSC archive has. Some of these are already included in the chronological section, but not all.

If you are looking for descriptions of life in China at a particular time, first check the folders titled "reports." If you are particularly interested in the FAU/FSU, the first items to read are the FAU/FSU newsletters. These provide an excellent window into the daily life of FAU/FSU members during wartime China.

You can also search the document for specific places, people or AFSC projects.
